

DeAnn Keating

DeAnn Keating is the Director of Operations of the Charles Keating IV Foundation. She brings extensive experience in non-profit fundraising, event coordination, and project management.

Before joining the Charles Keating IV Foundation, DeAnn was the VP of Administration and Event Manager for the International Society for Cardiovascular Translational Research (ISCTR). ISCTR is a non-profit medical society that designs cost-effective pathways for advancing cardiovascular translational research by fostering collaboration between American regulatory agencies, the medical device industry, clinician scientists, and healthcare organizations.

As a project manager for a start-up medical device company, she assisted in developing a novel medical device that was FDA-cleared and CE regulatory-approved from concept to commercialization in less than three years. Her contributions to this project also led to the publication of co-authored abstracts in prominent medical journals.

DeAnn holds nursing licenses both in Arizona and California. Her background specializes in cardiovascular medicine clinical research, and translational research. She is a member of the American Nurses Association, the American College of Cardiovascular Nursing, and The American Association of Nurse Practitioners. She enjoys reading, writing, swimming, yoga, and spending time with her family and French Bulldog.
